Construction Update

With construction complete on the new football field, track and bleachers (above), focus has turned to the next phase of Serra's building project.

Crews (at right) ripped up the front courtyard to lay the groundwork for new drainage and utilities. The student blacktop area will also be leveled and repaved in this phase. Demolition also began on the Padre baseball dugout (below right), making room for new bleachers and a state-of-the-art locker room and dugout facility. The needed infrastructure work will be completed by the time students return to school in August, and the baseball bleacher structure will be ready for use in the spring.

Years of Volunteer Work Rewarded with In Via Award

Judy Grosey, the quintessential Serra Mom, was predictably down-to-earth and humble when she was presented with the annual In Via Award in September.

"I'm much more comfortable in the back room making hot dogs and making sure the kids are staying out of trouble," she said when accepting the award, which is given to non-alumni who have supported the mission of Serra.

"When I heard about this, I was speechless," she said. "I said, 'Are you sure?' I think there's so many other people who are more deserving."

But she wasn't about to pass up on the opportunity to join the "brotherhood" that her son John Grosey '79 enjoyed as a student, teacher and administrator.

"I can finally say I'm a Padre!" she gloated. "Plain and simple, I love this place. You'd have trouble getting me out of here if you tried."

Judy's activities at Serra have run the gamut from serving on the Mothers' Auxiliary Board and cheering on her son's basketball teams, to helping chair the festivities for Serra's 50th anniversary. For more than 30 years, she has chaired fashion shows, worked on the school's casino night, and helped steer the planning for school auctions.

"She has served on the scenes and behind the scenes," said Serra President, Fr. Joe Bradley at the Mass. "You cannot think of Judy Grosey without thinking of a heart that is open."

top of the CLASS 'Rocket Roza' Earns 2003 Junipero Serra Award

Dedication Dick Roza '53 began his career at Bishop O'Dowd in 1958.

Dick Roza landed in detention his very first day of high school as a freshman at Serra in 1949.

"The first day I walked into Serra, a senior walked up to me, loosened my tie, turned it around, and told me to wear it like that, or else," he said.

The dress code infraction landed him in the principal's office that afternoon, but despite that rough start, he ended up making the classroom his career.

After a remarkable 45 years of teaching and coaching at Bishop O'Dowd High School, Dick was distinguished at his alma mater in October with the 2003 Junipero Serra Award, presented annually to an alumnus who is a leader in the com-

Serra Models Show off 'City by the Bay' Style in Annual Fashion Show

The Crowne Plaza Hotel in Foster City was transformed into the "City by the Bay" on Sunday, March 28 for Serra High School's Annual Luncheon and Fashion Show.

Co-chairs Pat Cannizzaro, Diane Karcich and Nina Loerke, and volunteers from the Mothers' Auxiliary made the show an event to remember. The 550 guests enjoyed a luncheon and were treated to a show with modeling by the students of Serra, Notre Dame and Mercy High Schools, along with faculty and parents from Serra.

Fashions on the runway were generously provided by babystyle, Bare Necessities, bebe, Cache, Chico's, the San Francisco Giants, Gingiss Formalwear, Gym-boree, Janie and Jack, Jessica McClintock, L'Vian and Levi Strauss.

Frosh Winners' Circle Frosh rowing coach Jon McDougall celebrated with Gavin Callies, Alex Pan, Anthony Heimuli, Jason Dunn and Johnny Hayward after their boat won a regional championship bronze medal in May.

Crew Shapes Up as the Teamwork, camaraderie and dedication are what provide the fuel for the boats that leave the Port of Redwood City four mornings a week during the Serra crew season.

The port becomes a hub of activity at 5:15 a.m. when teenage boys – who are notoriously fond of their sleep – arrive, break off into groups of two, four and eight, take up their oars, and dive into their morning rowing workout.

Second-year head coach Cassandra Cunningham expects nothing less.

“It’s not easy,” she says. “But the kids I want are the ones who have the most tenacity, who are willing to sacrifice themselves for their team each morning at practice.

“It gives them a sense of accomplishment.”

Crew, which was once a Tri-School sport, is now in its second year as a Serra-only sport that continues to gain momentum, attracts athletes who are not only enthusiastic about the morning practices, but also completely dedicated to their boats.

ningham. “If one link is missing, it really has an impact on the whole boat. You really have to think about your teammates, not just yourself.”

The hard work paid off this year at the Southwest Regional Championships on May 8 and 9 at Sacramento’s Lake Natoma.

Sam Walsh '05 and Greg Mason '04 earned gold medals in the men’s pair race, and soon-to-be sophomores Gavin Callies, Jason Dunn, Johnny Hayward, Anthony Heimuli and Alex Pan earned a bronze in the Mens’ Freshmen race.

The spoils from this year demonstrate that the team is leaps-and-bounds more confident and talented this year than it was last year.

“Last year, we only made it to one final, and this year we advanced to five finals, which was great,” says Cunningham.

“I think we made the right stepping stones this year. They have a taste for victory now, and they know that hard work takes you to the next level. It will be exciting to see what happens next year.”

With only two other high schools in the Bay Area offering rowing programs (St. Ignatius and Berkeley High School), Serra’s commitment to the sport is unique at the high school level. As a result, Padre rowers have more options than most when they move on to college.

“Not all kids can play football in college, but all kids can row,” according to Cunningham, who is already seeing some of her sophomores and juniors capture the interest of rowing schools across the country.

The Lake Natoma regional finals drew teams from all over California, Nevada and Arizona.

Climbing to the top Fred Stamm '04 conquered the terrain at Walker Creek Ranch in West Marin in May, and earned first place at the junior varsity level at the Mountain Bike State Championships.

off the beaten

Senior Excels in Road and Mountain

The State Championship Mountain Bike Races in Marin on May 2 crowned an unlikely winner for its Junior Varsity competition.

Serra student Fred Stamm, who graduated with the Class of 2004, took first place in the state-wide race, which is most remarkable because the race was only his third mountain bike race ever.

Despite his relative inexperience, Stamm proved that he was more than equal to the 18-mile course.

He's regarded as a promising young rider on the Bay Area road scene, where he has focused most of his energy.

"I've only ridden three mountain bike races in my life," says Stamm. "I'm mostly a road rider, and on the road I do pretty well."

Who knows? With the state championship under his belt, Stamm may leave his mark on both mountain and road terrain.

BIG league bound?

Chuck Lofgren '04 didn't have to wait long to embark on his career path after high school graduation.

On the Monday following the ceremony, the left-handed pitcher was drafted by the Cleveland Indians after a heady senior year that included being named a 2004 All-American, one of 35 high school baseball all-stars in the country to receive the distinction.

Prior to the Major League Baseball draft that had the Serra community on the edge of its seat, the All-American announcement was an exciting headline in the Padre dugout.

On May 6, when Lofgren recieved the official news that he been named an All-American, the team was presented with a PlayStation2 for use in the new dugout and locker room facility, scheduled for completion this spring.

Freshmen
Take a Deeper
Look at Father
Junípero Serra

“A true Serra Padre is one who is called to bring God’s grace to a world marked by injustice, hatred and violence. He begins this work at school by treating his classmates and himself with respect.”

For most freshmen who enter Junípero Serra High School, the name of the school represents many things – sports championships, brotherhood and academics.

But you'd be hard-pressed to find one of these 14 year-olds who knows the history of the man himself – Father Junípero Serra – who left his home in Mallorca as a young man in 1749 and bravely set out for the New World to preach the Gospel to Native Americans in Mexico and California.

His story, full of sacrifice, faith against all odds, and dedication, is the theme of the freshmen retreat early in the fall every year, when theology classes travel down the California coastline to view firsthand the fruits of Father Serra's labors at Mission San Juan Bautista, and tour his final resting place, at Mission San Carlos Borromeo.

"A lot of who we are as a school is based on Father Serra – that's what this day is all about," Campus Minister Cathy Pickerel told freshmen as they stepped off the bus at the Carmel Mission on October 22. "Just think guys, this is where the namesake of your high school is buried."

Among the fascinating facts that students learn about Father Serra: their distinguished namesake stood only five feet, two inches tall, and his lodgings were stark and primitive, encompassing only a hard wooden bed and a writing table.

But the trip is about more than acquainting the young men with Father Serra. Some students are new to Catholicism in general, and exploring the mission proves to be an altogether novel experience. One student on the trip was perplexed by the font of water just inside the entryway of the basilica, while another was visibly excited about simply stepping inside the vestibule. "I've never been inside a church!" he exclaimed.

But perhaps the biggest lesson that Pickerel hopes the freshmen learn is why Father Serra's legacy is still important and applicable to high school students.

"Brotherhood is very much a real thing at Serra," she told the freshmen as they gathered for a moment of prayer inside the basilica.

"It's not gimmicky. You're part of a 300 year-old tradition of being gutsy enough to give it your all.

"This man sacrificed everything to spread his faith," she said. "He left his family, he left everything. You're connected to him."

Since 1975, Serra and St. Ignatius have clashed in an uproarious, unparalleled rivalry:

THE JUNGLE GAME

When reflecting on the 30-year tradition of the storied Jungle Game between Serra and St. Ignatius, Chuck Rapp almost waxes poetic – if a boys’ varsity basketball coach can be said to wax poetic on any subject.

“I don’t want to sound cheesy,” he says. “But it’s a slice of Americana, and echoes a time gone by. Two rival schools meet in a high school gym, and vie for bragging rights, surrounded by their community. The game has always really appealed to me.”

He’s not alone; for 30 consecutive years, the game has appealed to the entire Serra community. The spotlight event of the basketball season, it invariably draws sellout crowds, excited fans, and passion on both sides of the court. Basketball players from the city who travel down to the Peninsula for the match-up in Serra's gym are greeted with a spectacular sight: palm fronds that bedeck the bleachers and walls, an amped-up, deafening cheering section, and a basketball squad that is ready for jungle warfare.

Even 30 years later, it's not hard to see how the Jungle Game got its start. On February 14, 1975, the SI players walked into a gym that looked much the same as it does now, expecting an easy victory, and a sweet cap to an undefeated, 23-0 season that had already earned the Wildcats the de facto WCAL title that year.

The game drew the biggest crowd ever to witness a Serra basketball game to date. Students packed the gym, hallways, and even the roof of the gym to observe the action from the skylights above the court.

"The crowd was out the door and all the way around the gym," remembers Randy Vogel, then a fourth-year teacher and the Rally Committee Moderator. "The noise level was unbelievable."

The noise, the commotion and the skills of the Padre hoopsters proved enough to rattle the top-seeded Wildcats, in an unforgettable 54-50 upset.

"We were at the height of our game, and that crowd was a big reason why," Serra's varsity coach Pat McGlennon said that night. "It's a super advantage to have all those people yelling and screaming for you."

Fueled by the school spirit in the stands, center Joe Ned and forward Mike O'Regan "had possibly the best all-around efforts of their careers," according to the San Mateo County Times the next day.

In a tense overtime period, O'Regan and senior

John O'Leary each scored four points, clinching a Padre victory and halting SI's 23-0 streak.

Serra students stormed the court, exulting in the narrow victory.

"Students danced or jumped to the beat of the music as clothes, paper and bodies flew through the air," wrote Bill Raynor '75 two weeks later in the Serra Friar.

"The nets were cut and thrown into the middle of the crowd.

"As the night wore on, all San Mateo learned of Serra's victory," he continued.

"(The excitement) stayed and will stay with Serra students much into the future."

It left a deep impression on SI head coach Bob Drucker as well. Two years later, when the team was preparing to travel down to San Mateo to face off against the Padres again, he told a San Francisco Examiner reporter, "We have to go down to Serra, and it'll be a jungle down there."

With his choice of words, Drucker unwittingly began a 30-year tradition that has become the highlight of the Serra basketball season.

"I had no idea it had started because of something I said," says Drucker today. "It wasn't until

The making of a tradition Mike O'Regan '75 hit a jump shot over Wildcat Michael Bowie in the 1975 SI upset; Serra coach Pat McGlennon distinguished himself by leading the Pads to second place in the rugged WCAL during his first year of coaching; John Caselli '75 was named WCAL Player of the Year for his efforts during the first Jungle Game and throughout the '74-'75 season.

several years ago that I was talking to Kevin Donahue, and asked him where the Jungle Game came from, and he said, 'You started it...don't you remember?'"

Drucker remembers the Padre spirit that inspired the sentiment, however.

"In '75, when we lost that famous game down there, it was a jungle," says Drucker.

Since the "St. Valentine's Day Massacre," the schools have shared a "rivalry that ebbs and flows," according to Rapp. The series has had moments of disappointment, excitement and high intensity, but never fails to be a marquee match-up between two excellent schools and two talented squads.

For Serra Athletic Director Kevin Donahue, who in 1979 took the reins of the varsity team, the most memorable game in the series occurred on its eighth anniversary, in 1982. The Jungle Game was the last league game of the season, and SI was once again undefeated going into the contest, as well as the top-ranked team in Northern California. Serra occupied second place in the WCAL, and the game had attracted another sellout crowd.

"It was a game that had no bearing on the league – both teams had already locked up first and second place – but the atmosphere, the intensity, the enthusiasm was unreal," says Donahue. "Fifteen hundred people were packed into the gym, and spectators had climbed up on the roof and were looking through the windows."

St. Ignatius had the first tip, and the players went into a four corners offensive set, refusing to engage the Padres and attempting to slow the tempo of the game from the start.

"I turned to my assistant coach, and said, 'We've got 'em,'" remembers Donahue. "Once they went into the four corners, I knew they were afraid of us."

With a group of starting seniors that included Steve Ughe, Barry Bonds, Tom Paroubeck, Bill Tuerck and Bob McKercher, the Padres succeeded in defeating the top-ranked Wildcats, and "the crowd went crazy," recalls Donahue.

"Steve Ughe came up to me and gave me a big hug, and said, 'I can't believe it! We beat 'em! We beat 'em!'"

The 1982 victory came on the heels of losses in

Pandemonium in 1982 After the 62-50 victory over SI in 1982, varsity coach Kevin Donahue, above, was carried off the court by exuberant Serra students and players. "The crowd went crazy," Donahue recalls today. "The enthusiasm was unreal." Below, a collection of Jungle Game T-shirts over the series' 30 years showcases the game's importance to Padre fans. Clockwise from top left, the shirts were worn in 1997, 2001, 1989, and 1992.

1980 and 1981, which made the win especially sweet for the graduating seniors.

"The '82 team had never beat SI before, and they knocked off the number one team in Northern California," says Donahue. "The kids played phenomenally."

Since then, safety regulations and fire codes have limited the number of fans who gain entrance to the game each year. There is no longer a rooftop cheering section, and tickets are now a prized commodity for both Serra and SI fans.

"I'll be asked throughout the summer, 'Hey, can you save me a couple tickets to the Jungle Game?'" says Rapp.

And for Donahue, the logistics and organization of the game can be quite a challenge. But he doesn't begrudge the fanfare for a moment.

"It's great to have a tradition like this," he says. "A spotlight event like this is good for the kids, the program and the school."

Rapp's favorite memory of the series happened in January of 2002, when a bizarre plumbing malfunction at school brought the Jungle Game festivities to a halt just before game time.

"The whole day of the Jungle Game, there's a lot of excitement and pent-up energy," explains Rapp.

"It starts in the very first class of the day, and kids don't stop talking about it all day long. So we had all this momentum building up to the game, the gym was decorated, and we were eating our team dinner before the game, when we got the news: the water main broke!"

The broken pipe forced administrators to reschedule the game for the following night, and the hundreds of spectators who showed up for the biggest game of the season were turned away at the parking lot.

"It was really disappointing," says Rapp. "And it's ironic that my most vivid memory of the Jungle Game is of walking into that empty gym that night. It was all decorated, but deserted. It was totally surreal."

But, he adds, in a 30-year series, "there's bound to be mishaps like that."

The Case of the Multiplying Tickets

Just how did the Serra gym come to be as tightly packed and spirit-filled as it was on the night of that first, tradition-setting Jungle Game?

Chalk it up to the over-enthusiasm of a young teacher.

Randy Vogel, who in 1975 was a fourth-year teacher with the post of Rally Committee Moderator, remembers the debacle a little sheepishly, because he was in charge of distributing tickets for the much-anticipated match-up between the Padres and the Wildcats.

"I had the task of selling the tickets to the students," he says. "They were in heavy demand. We just printed tickets on pink paper, and before we knew it, we realized that we had sold way too many tickets to our students, without leaving enough for SI."

But that's not the end of the story...after realizing his error, Vogel decided that a few more Pads in the stands wouldn't hurt.

"I got a soft spot for some of the kids, and sold a couple hundred more tickets," he laughs now. "As a fairly young teacher, I figured the more, the merrier."

Still, even all of the legally issued tickets couldn't accommodate all of the Serra students who wanted to see the showdown.

"There were kids who were actually forging tickets," says Vogel. At the door of the gym on the night of the game, he confiscated at least ten tickets that were Xeroxed and carried the forged signature of Jim Monahan, Student Activities Director at the time. Most were inexpert renditions of the original ticket, and some were even copied on the back of pink class summons slips.

The end result? The gym was not only filled to bursting, but the corridors outside the gym were packed as well.

"That night was incredible," says Vogel. "At least three quarters of the home stands were filled with students, and I personally haven't missed a single Jungle Game since. It's blossomed into a wonderful tradition on the Peninsula."

“We had all this momentum building up to the game, the gym was decorated, and we were eating our team dinner before the game, when we got the news: the water main broke!”

Current Serra Varsity Bas-

And perhaps the delayed game added more intensity to the matchup; the Padres defeated the Wildcats the following night 44-39.

Ironically, in a series that has inspired so much excitement, hullabaloo and pandemonium for the home team, the visitors have prevailed most often. St. Ignatius leads the Jungle Game series 16-14, and also dominated the match-up for five years in a row, from 1983 to 1987, the longest winning streak on either side.

In fact, since 1983, SI has been in the drivers' seat of the series. According to Coach Rapp, that trend is about to change, however.

On a three-game winning streak, he sees Serra taking control of the series once more, especially after the Padres' emphatic victory on January 21, with a 56-38 win.

“The last two games we won in double figures,” he says. “It feels good that we’ve lately exerted some control over the series, and my goal is for Serra to dominate again.”

Monkey business The illustration at right by Bobby MacKenzie '92 captured the tenor of the 1991 matchup.

Inaugural Group Receives Alumni Award of Merit

In a gym packed full of almost 1,000 young men in late September, Junípero Serra High School introduced eight of its most outstanding alumni in the first-ever induction ceremony of Padre grads into Serra's professional hall of fame.

The Alumni Award of Merit assembly honored two recipients each in the categories of arts and letters, science and technology, business, and public affairs.

Bill Keller from the Class of 1966, who holds one of the highest posts in American journalism as the Executive Editor of the New York Times, received one of the awards designated for Serra graduates in the field of arts and letters. Keller is also a 1989 Pulitzer Prize winner for his coverage of the Soviet Union. His colleague in letters, David Littlejohn '54, who has written 14 books on literature, music and architecture, and serves as a professor emeritus at the University of California, Berkeley, was also honored.

On the science and technology front, Michael Hackworth '59 – co-founder of Cirrus Logic and one of the Silicon Valley's most important contributors to the semiconductor industry – was honored along with David Giuliani '64, who invented the Sonicare toothbrush, among other accomplishments in the biotech field.

In the business world, both John Shields '50, the former President of Trader Joe's, and Bart Araujo '61, the owner of Araujo Estate Wines, and the former owner and CEO of A-M Homes, were recognized for the outstanding contributions they've made in their fields.

Finally, standing out in the arena of public affairs, Ruben Barrales '80, currently the Deputy Assistant to the President of the United States and Director of Intergovernmental Affairs, was honored alongside Edward Keller '47, who is retired from a career filled with honors from the U.S. Department of State.

"For too many years, when people said the name Serra High School, someone would respond with, 'That's the school where Jim Fregosi went,'" said Director of Alumni Affairs Russ Bertetta '67. "Later, people would mention Lynn Swann; now it's Barry Bonds or Tom Brady.

"But there's a lot more to Serra than famous athletes. It's time that everyone knows what we know – that Junípero Serra High School has graduated men who are doctors, scientists, district attorneys, and professionals in all fields."

Advice from the varied award recipients was as diverse as their line of work.

"It seems like not so long ago that I was sitting there like you are, wondering what I was going to do when I grew up," said Barrales. "Doing what you love is the key to happiness."

For winemaker Araujo, the education he received at Serra shaped the businessman he would become.

"Serra allowed me to reach for the stars," he told current students at the assembly. "I was forced and prodded to do things I didn't think I was capable of doing in both sports and academics. At Serra, you were never allowed to give up."

New York Times Editor Bill Keller has fond memories of his experiences at Serra as well.

As a reporter for the Serra Friar, he honed his writing and editing skills and also worked alongside classmate and New York Times bestselling author John Lesocroat.

"You can take the boy out of Serra High School, but you can't take Serra High School out of the boy," Keller quipped.

Homecoming Serra graduates ranging in age from 18 to 70 gathered for the blessing of the new football field on October 11, 2003. Above, the Director of Institutional Advancement Michael Peterson, Principal Lars Lund and former President Joe Bradley '73 led the community in a brief prayer.

new TURF

The first game played on Serra's new football field coincided with Homecoming 2003. Hundreds of alumni and their families joined the celebration on October 11.

For the first time,
read the story of Serra sports in a book scheduled to be released in time for Homecoming 2004.

Inspiring coaches, individual stars and legendary teams have all shaped Serra athletics, making Padre programs among the most competitive and well-respected in the area. The book, capturing more than six decades of scores and stats, is the story of Serra athletes, from the stars to the supporting cast.

Written by alumni sports journalists, and filled with hundreds of photographs, the book promises to be a trip down memory lane for Padres who played as well as those who cheered from the stands.
